Breakfast | Lunch | Dinner

- Tsaritsino Royal Estate: (also known as "Queen's Village") is a famous palace building park in Moscow. Tsaritsino means "paradise". It was built by Queen Catherine II to commemorate Russia's victory in the first Russo-Turkish War. The palace, royal bakery, opera house and other buildings were built here. The Tsaritsino Lake was also transformed, and a large number of pavilions and corridors were built on the island, and a small pier was built. These buildings are all made of red bricks and inlaid with ornamental decorative patterns of white stone carvings. They are typical Gothic buildings. Later, they were demolished several times. Now, after renovation, the Tsaritsino Manor has a brand new look.
- Moscow State University (exterior): (Moscow State University was founded on January 12, 1755, and is the oldest university in Russia. After the new main building of the university was built on Sparrow Hills in 1953, Moscow State University moved to Sparrow Hills. This main building is one of the seven Stalinist buildings in Moscow (known as the Seven Sisters). Stalinist buildings are typical centralized buildings with large bases and high spires, revealing strong "monism" values).
- Lenin Hill Observation Deck: Located in the southwest of Moscow, Russia, on the south bank of the Moscow River, it is also the highest point in Moscow, with an altitude of 220 meters. After lunch, take the newly launched Sapsan high-speed train to St. Petersburg, second class (4 hours); dinner after arrival, check in to the hotel for rest.

- Summer Palace Garden (excluding the palace): Peter the Great's Summer Palace, also known as the "Russian Summer Palace" and "Peter's Palace", was designed by the Swiss Domenico Trezzini. It is the suburban palace of successive Russian tsars and an early building in St. Petersburg. It is located in the forest on the south bank of the Gulf of Finland, about 40 kilometers from St. Petersburg, and covers an area of more than 400 hectares. It was destroyed by the German army during World War II. After Hitler's plan to occupy the Astoria Hotel failed, he planned to hold a New Year's victory celebration here, which angered the Soviet authorities. Between December 1941 and January 1942, Stalin ordered the palace to be blown up to prevent the Germans from celebrating. After World War II, it was restored and listed as a World Heritage Site by UNESCO.
- Catherine Garden and Palace are closed every Tuesday (Catherine Palace): It is a building built during the reign of Tsar Peter the Great. The palace is exquisitely built, with fresh and soft colors, and is filled with the softness and charm of women. It can be said that the garden is full of poetry and paintings, and everywhere is filled with enchanting melodies and the fragrance of flowers and plants. The atmosphere of Empress Catherine's debauchery and extravagance during her lifetime still permeates the entire garden. The Catherine Palace was listed as a United Nations World Heritage Site in 1990.
